

eHealth and health care service system - Part 1. Influences of background factors and policies

Drag the words to correct boxes.

Currently in Finland, the tax-funded public sector covers the majority of all healthcare provision while the private sector covers the rest of the services. Health services in Finland are divided into primary care and specialist medical care. In the health and social services reform of Finland, the responsibility for organising health services is transferred to wellbeing services counties. Their funding is arranged by the state. Finland has channelled its health policies to secure the future of healthcare in the changing operating environment, and technology plays a crucial role in this goal. Furthermore, information management of health data is seen as a way to support knowledge-based decision making and development of healthcare service.
